Taiwan's education ministry is pushing forward with its goal of bilingual English-Chinese education in schools and more university degrees and postgraduate courses taught in English as part of an effort to attract foreign students to plug a demographic gap, improve the country's competitiveness and to compete head-on with universities in Hong Kong and Singapore.

Taiwan's goal, announced by President Tsai Ing-wen in 2018, is to become a bilingual nation, including at university level, and attract more foreign students, particularly from Asian countries, under its New Southbound Policy launched in 2016.
